

Shakira McKenzie-Meade, project management apprentice in Capital Development

I've been an apprentice since September. I really enjoy being here and I'm really glad I found it. I think an apprenticeship is a great stepping stone to the career you'd like to get into and I recommend it to anybody.

I've developed a real in-depth understanding of the construction industry. I think without the apprenticeship it would have been hard to understand the technicality of construction, especially in the health industry. There are so many different technical problems people have to overcome

I'd definitely recommend it to anyone. I tell my friends about it all the time. I tell them to look on the NHS website because it is really something I'm glad I got into.

When you work in healthcare you understand even though a project might be small in cost it'll have a massive impact on people.
